Time to Graduation Rates

Wilson Pacific University, in its nature as an online school with uniquely specific degrees, does not have a student base of first-time, full-time freshmen; therefore, the time to graduation rate is effected by a large number of students transferring in credits to complete their degree.

With our associates program we see an average of 2 years for completions. With the degree requiring 60 units for graduation, and an average student taking 12 units in the spring and 15 units in the fall, this would be 27 units per year. Typically then it would take a first-time, full-time freshman 2 ½ years to complete an associate's degree.

A bachelor's degree requires 120 units for graduation. Using the same full-time possibility of 27 units completed in a year, a typical first-time, full-time student would take 4 ½ years to complete a bachelor's degree. Wilson Pacific bachelor's degree graduates', take an average of 3.1 years for completing their degree.

Wilson Pacific University requires 36 units to complete a master's degree. Students typically will take 9 units in the fall and 6 units in the spring; earning 15 units per year. This would mean a master student would need 2 ½ years to complete their degree. We are seeing this to be our average; right on track with the expectations.
